

POLICE STUDIES (APB)

Justice and Security

Overview

The Department of Criminology and Criminal Justice at Plymouth State University aims to serve students interested in a variety of careers spanning law enforcement, investigations, court administration, corrections, juvenile services, loss prevention, as well as graduate or law school. Consistent with the general mission of Plymouth State University, the department seeks to produce well-rounded graduates who are equipped to both continue their education and enter the work force. In addition, the department serves the surrounding community, not only by producing high quality graduates well prepared to enter their field, but also by partnering with local and regional agencies to provide academic and research support.

The Applied Bachelor's Degree in Police Studies is aimed specifically at students who come into college knowing that they want to pursue a career in law enforcement. This degree will benefit prospective students by saving them a year of tuition while providing them with a well-rounded general education experience coupled with a targeted major experience. The Police Studies curriculum includes a heavy emphasis on understanding the law, understanding the role of police in a democratic society, and developing a variety of skills necessary for a law enforcement career. The skills emphasized include problem solving techniques, critical thinking and analytic skills, verbal and written communication skills, data analysis skills, and physical fitness, along with an appreciation for ethical and professional behavior in the field. Upon completion of the program, students will be well prepared for a career in law enforcement. Students will develop an independent sense of self and leadership skills, with a tolerance toward others and the ability to work with diverse groups of people.
